PULL TOGETHER.

Now that the silver lining is becoming visible on the clouds of financial depression that have been hanging over the country for the past year and a half, and since Redcliff is among the first of the Western towns to benefit by its illuminating effect, it behooves the people of the town to show their appreciation of the fact by forgetting their troubles of the past few months, by stopping their chewing the rag, fault-finding and complaining—a disease which seems to have become chronic in some circles recently—and jump into the harness, each contributing his little mite in taking up the slack in the traces and helping to pull the municipal wagon of Redcliff through the streets of progress and development.

While everybody admits that times have been much quieter here for the past year than we have been accustomed to, yet any one who reads or travels knows that this state of affairs has not been confined to Redcliff, but has been world-wide. It is unreasonable, yet it is true, that in times of depression and hard times governments and councils are blamed for it, while as a matter of fact they have little or nothing to do with it. To say they have is giving them credit for being able to regulate the actions of the sun and the showers and taking it out of the hands of a divine providence. Notwithstanding this there are people in Redcliff as in every other town who appear to have acquired the kick habit lately. The writer was an innocent listener the other evening to a bunch of them and the conversation was really quite amusing, pleased them. They found fault with everything from the way the town was run to the way the roosters in the country crowed. After listening to this for a few minutes we could not help but wonder why, with two trains each way pulling out here every day, these men still remain in Redcliff. There is only one answer: These men think one way and talk another. They know that it has been quite all over and that Redcliff's chances for an earlier recovery are brighter than other places, else why in this world are they staying here?

We have no objection to fair criticism. In fact, we would encourage it, but there is a time and place for it. There is a difference between fair criticism brought in a fair way before those being criticized, and a chronic kick brought on by jealousy.

In the past we have heard it said of Redcliff "that the town was bound to go ahead as she had a good, lively bunch of citizens and they all pulled together." By this co-operation we accomplished much; let us get at it again, and at once.

NEED HORSES FOR FIRE HALL.

As a result of last Tuesday's fire the need of some better system of getting the fire engine out to the fire was clearly demonstrated. In all fires much depends on promptness in getting the water started to work. A few minutes on the start makes a big difference in the finish. This being the case some provision should be made to make it possible to get the engine and hose to the fire as quickly as possible. As most of the bad fires happen at night and as that is the time no horses are handy it would be a good idea either to follow up our sug-

PATRONIZE HOME INDUSTRY

Money spent at home means helping to build up schools, churches, sidewalks, sewers, roads, etc. In your own town. Money sent out of town to departmental stores, etc., means helping to build up some other town or city. Which do you want to help, your own or some other town?

creation of a few weeks ago and have a motor truck or have the town get another horse and keep both of them handy to the fire hall at night.

In dealing with fire departments in smaller places the conservation commission says: "There is real value in keeping a section of a fire department inspecting the city, learning the interior layout of the large buildings, the places where inflammable goods are stored, the location of hydrants, and the approaches, that in case of fire breaking out no time is lost in placing the water where it will be the most effective."

NEXT

An incident which bears out our article of a few weeks ago on the necessity of systematic advertising was brought to our attention a few days ago.

Two ladies returning from the Hat got into conversation and, opening a parcel, one showed the other what she had purchased while in the Hat at the rate of two for 35 cents. Why, said the other lady, I bought the identical things in Redcliff just yesterday at two for 30 cents. The first lady was greatly surprised and said she did not know any one sold them here as she had never seen them advertised. This is only another proof that merchants are sometimes to blame themselves if money that should be spent at home goes out of town.

THE SCAVENGING SYSTEM BAD.

We have been informed by Mr. J. Moore that he and the residents living near him are put to considerable inconvenience and annoyance because the town scavenger is not doing his duty in that part of the town. According to Mr. Moore the other houses in that district have not been attended to by the scavenger since March last, and that he and many others have been compelled to do this work themselves. He states that the scavenger is sometimes to the attention of the city officials on several occasions, but so far nothing has been done to remedy the grievance. He also says he understands the people owning houses are taxed ten dollars a year for having this work done, yet have to do it themselves.

If this is correct the people of that district certainly have a grievance and one, which the Council should attend to at once. Besides being most annoying this state of affairs, especially in this hot weather, will have a tendency to breed disease, and the responsible should see that this very important branch of the town's work is attended to regularly.

GASSES IN WELLS AND HOW TO AVOID DANGER

parts of air to one of gas. To give you an idea of the explosive force of this gas, it has been found by experiment that one pound of this explosive mixture when ignited produces 240,000 units of heat, and as, every unit of heat is equal to 778 foot lbs. approximately 190,000 foot lbs. weight is then followed that 45 x 24244 x 778 divided by 38000 equals 25553 foot lbs. power of force produced instantaneously by the ignition of 1000 cubic feet of this gas, although this gas is highly combustible yet it is a non-supporter of combustion or life, and unless a strong fever of gas was struck it would scarcely be termed dangerous, as owing to its lightness it weighs a small quantity would soon rise to the mouth of the well. In weight it is a little over half the weight of air, its composition is one of carbon and four of hydrogen or (CH<sub>4</sub>).

How to detect the presence of the different gases: First, carbonic acid gas can be easily detected with the aid of a naked light, by lowering it down the well with a line or string, the light being extinguished immediately it reaches a dangerous body of carbon dioxide. When there is not enough gas present to extinguish the light then you are quite safe in going down and making an inspection. The effect of small quantities of gas on the light of the lamp can be easily seen, the light losing from 60 to 80 per cent. of its luminosity. When breathed in small quantities it causes dizziness, followed by drowsiness, and finally sleep. The best way to remove this gas from wells is by means of a small fan worked by hand and forcing the air down through a column of stove pipes which is hung on one side of the well and reaches to within 10 or 12 feet of the bottom, but as a fan is not found on every homestead the next best and inexpensive method should be resorted to, as follows: If a wind is blowing from the west, a sheet would be to hang a column of stove pipes down one side of the well, having a hood or funnel fixed on the stove pipes, the open end of funnel facing the wind, the air would then blow down the stove pipes to the bottom of the well and dilute and render harmless the carbon dioxide. On a calm day it would be wise to remove the hood from off the stove pipes and hang a spirit lamp or oil lamp directly underneath and two or three inches below the bottom end of the stove pipes, thus revealing the mode of ventilation, the foul air and gases would then rise to the surface through the stove pipes under the influence of the heat, the fresh air coming down the well on the outside of the stove pipes. This system would produce enough good air for at least three men.

Carbon monoxide. To the initiated this gas is practically beyond detection until it is late, and to prevent accidents its presence must be detected before venturing down the well. As a lamp will burn brightly in a mixture that will instantaneously kill a man we may as well show the idea of the lamp test. Then how is it to be done, and done safely. Nearly every homesteader has the wherewithal to make a safe and satisfactory test. Get a live bird, mouse, or young chicken, put it in a cage and lower it to the bottom of the well. As it takes a much lower per centage of carbon monoxide to kill a chicken than a man, if he lets the chicken remain in the well for three minutes the chicken will be dead when brought up if there is any carbon monoxide present, but if the chicken shows no signs of the effect of gas then you are perfectly safe to go down the well, but it has been proved that gas is present if must be removed before you dare to descend, and it can be removed by the same method as the carbon dioxide. Carbonated hydrogen can be easily detected by the smell, it also causes giddiness and twitching of the eyes. When present in small quantities it causes headache and vomiting. It is easily removed by the stove pipes.

Light carbonated hydrogen gas can be easily detected from its explosive properties, and all precautions for the removal of this gas are absolutely necessary. If by accident you should happen to ignite the gas in the well, you must not lose sight of the fact that at the time of the explosion, carbon monoxide was generated and that the live chicken test is again necessary before descending.

In emergency cases such as the one recorded last week, if the person was not killed, but lying in the bottom of the well it is quite possible to keep him alive until assistance can be procured by simply pouring two or three buckets of water (spraying if it is possible) down one side of the well, the water falling from the top has a tendency to create a partial vacuum, the air in rushing in to destroy that vacuum naturally follows the water in front and is forced by the water back in this way sufficient air can get to the bottom of the well to keep the person alive several hours if necessary. The falling water also induces and hastens the diffusion of the gases, and by this means it is possible to dilute the dangerous gases in the well and render it harmless.
